them to shape their own destinies, attend college, and become world-changing problem solvers.

Who You Are

Henderson Collegiate is a place where many of our teachers started their educational career, and have continued to grow their teaching and leadership skills over time. Curious to see if you have what it takes to teach at Henderson Collegiate? Here's who we look for:

- A go-getter that will move mountains to do what is best for our students and team
- An encourager that recognizes the power and potential within all students
- A life-long learner that continuously strives to be a better version of themselves through learning, improving and being hungry for feedback
- A jovial giant who knows that with learning comes joy, love and laughter
- A gritty problem-solver who approaches challenges with smart solutions in mind
- A detail maven who plans backwards to meet timelines and manage complex projects
- A data-driven analyst who reflects and takes swift action based on results
- A proactive communicator who reaches out to students, families, and teammates

* A Bachelor's degree is required for all teaching positions. Having a North Carolina teaching license is not required; we provide support to our teachers as they work to earn their license.

Supporting Our Teachers

Knowing that the positive adult figures in students' lives are the true agents of change, the school places great emphasis on supporting and developing its staff. Henderson Collegiate provides professional development for all teachers through our instructional coaching model. Instructional coaches support teachers through observations, debriefs, and lesson plan feedback. In addition to our instructional coaches, all teachers who are new to Henderson Collegiate undergo further training and development to learn the foundational aspects of highly effective teaching practices.
